RISE AND FALL OF THE ASTOR HOBO.

Tramp Goes to Work Who Gained Fame by Sleeping One Night in a Downy Bed.

His Adventure in the Millionaire's House Helps Him in Business.

After Two Days as a Longshoreman Some body Steals His Fancy Clothes and He Says "Wot t'ell !" and Throws Up His Job.

John Garvey six months ago was the who asked for handouts at back doors, car. 10c, higher. ried a tometo can, slept on the docks, in hallways or barns, just an inconspicuous private in the great army of bums.

But one happy night fame came to him as in a lightning stroke. It wasn't of his own seeking, this bolt of fortune, because a preliminary event in the shape of a keg of soured beer removed his destiny from his own guidance. That night John Gar-vey unwittingly found an open door, stag-gered in, fell asleep, and awoke to find hmiself famous.

No longer was he a plain, unnamed tramp. The "Astor Hobo" he was from the time he was found sleeping on the dainty couch in the millionaire's house on Fifth avenue. "Astor Hobe" was more than a mere empty title. It gave him the softest corner in the cribs of railroad ties along the roads. Other tramps hastened to tall him where freight cars were open and dogs were absent. He was the very Li Hung Chang of tramps, and people gave him cold pte and what was left of yesterday's roast the more gladly because he had once slept in a curained boudoir and gone to jail for it.

Nearly all eminent men are particular about their clothes, and Astor Hobo was no exception to the rule. He wore patent leathers and high hats. To be sure, other people had worn them before he got then but they were to good clothes what he was to respectability.

Other tramsp used to envy him because

"must a jes' been pinched," but Pittsburg, who used to work himself and was known occasionally relapse into his old habit the tramp of the easy granight onto one of the Hamburg

American steamers at Hoboken. It was true. Astor Hobo had turne longshoreman and for two days worke on the dock. He still wore his cracks patent leathers and the high hat that ha uffered so much. Garvey dld not give up its title, and the other longshoremen called "Astor" for short, but he went to live days he had meals indoors and slept to bed. But on the third night somestic bed. But on the third night some while Astor Hobo was sleeping the post the drunk. That discouraged him. Ith many a "Wot t'ell!" Astor Hobo w up his job, gave up his bunk and ted away from Hoboken.

By principal fear is that the man who was a principal fear is that the man who go around, a spurious Astor Hobo, using the fame that does not belong to him to obtain hand-outs and more clothes, to the detrinent and injury of the genuine amuriginal Astor Hobo.

I love the old fatherland. And, as for India, why, of course, a big part of my heart always belongs out there. I don't know how long I shall remain in India. Everything will depend upon the success I meet in gathering material for future work."

who robbed D. P. Arnold, a wealthy resident, on the Post road last year.

The man had a revolver, a large knife, simmy and ether burglars' tools. Monday morning when an officer went to take Reese his breakfast he found the door of the lockup torn from its hinges and the interior empty. An examination showed that by means of a bar the prisoner had forced the staples holding the linges. The police deny the story, but it is said the prisoner left a note in which he declared he would return the broken staples by mail.

Some people believe that this was the fourith burglar who escaped after the fatal shooting of Walker B. Adams at Bedford Station.

This is the second time prisoners have escaped from the Port Chester lockup. A few months ago two thieves crawled out of an eighteen-inch pipe, which furnishes an exit for foul air. The lock-up has been condemned many times, but the officials have not done anything.

Creditors of His Son Seeking to Compel

Him to Shoulder More

Justice Pryor, in the Supreme Court, yesterday listened to arguments on an application of the majority of directors of the Murray Hill Bank for the appointment of a receiver. James MacGregor Smith, representing the directors, and Samuel Untermeyer the depositors, urged the applicameyer the depositors, urged the application.

It was alleged that a number of notes held by the bank were being protested, and it was claimed that the appointment of a receiver would not in any manner interfere with plans for a reorganization of the bank but, on the contrary, would have a tendency to aid the reorganization committee. Deputy Attorney-General Kisselborch opposed the application, saying that the bank property was now in the hands of the State Superintendent of Banking, and as long as he had control no receiver could get at the assets. He argued that the initiative should be taken by the Attorney-General after the Superintendent had concluded his labors. Justice Pryor asked for briefs and reserved his decision.

Yesterday's Engagements of Gold. The additional engagements of gold for mport yesterday, amounting to $2,250,000, were divided among the following: Bank of British North America, $1,000,000; W. H. Crossman & Bro., 1,000,000, and Price, Mc-Cormick & Co. $250,000. The latter impor-tation is for Chicago parties. The total to date is $20,600,000.
